RESEARCH INTERESTS

Corporate investment; accounting information; voluntary disclosure; real options theory; textual analysis (NLP/LLM). I study how accounting information interacts with corporate investment decisions, particularly under uncertainty and through the lens of real options theory. Methodologically, I use textual analysis, including NLP and LLM-based approaches.

COAUTHORED WORKING PAPERS

[1] From Green to Green: Local Parks and Corporate Green Transition

- With Eric Yeung (Cornell) and Yao Lu (Cornell)
- Abstract: We identify the openings of new urban parks in major U.S. cities as “green shocks” and examine whether increases in green space near firms’ headquarters are associated with firms’ green transition, as manifested in both real effects (i.e., carbon emissions) and information effects (i.e., voluntary environmental disclosure). Consistent with dynamic green transition theory, we document i) significant declines in firms’ carbon emissions following green shocks and ii) significant increases in firms’ voluntary environmental disclosure, especially among firms that rely more heavily on external financing for green transition. Evidence from satellite imagery further supports green exposure as a plausible mechanism underlying the observed real effects and information effects.
